Chinese Science Bulletin, a comprehensive academic journal of China, which is sponsored by the Chinese Academy of Sciences and published by Science in China Press, devotes itself to the publication of the up-to-date scientific achievements in all fields of natural sciences in China. It is now widely recognised as the most important English scientific journal in China, with Professor Zhou Guangzhao (President of the Chinese Academy of Science) as the Editor-in-Chief and an Editorial Board composed of the best Chinese scientists in China and around the world.

Since its establishment in 1950, Chinese Science Bulletin has reported numerous achievements of scientific researchers in China, of which many are up to the advanced international standard, contributing much to the domestic and international academic exchange, and to the development of scientific undertakings, hence winning high praise from academic circles at home and abroad.

Chinese Science Bulletin has been on the selections lists of some international retrieval journals, such as CA, EI, Bulletin of Japanese Scientific and Technological Documents, On Line Database, and Current Content, and some reports in this journal have been reviewed by newspapers or journals. According to a latest report of China Scientific and Technological Institute, Chinese Science Bulletin ranks the first among the 20 most frequently cited journals of China. And Chinese Science Bulletin is counted among the 62 International journals listed in the column Multidisciplinary Sci. in the JCR of SCI.

Chinese Science Bulletin will spare no efforts to keep abreast of the rapid progress in science and technology of China and to make its features — "high", "quick", and "new" — more distinctive. Chinese Science Bulletin now mainly presents concise reports on the latest research in basic and applied sciences and a column "letters" covering briefly the most recent research news. Thus, this journal is essential reading for all scientists and students involved in these areas of research.
